EDITORIAL

Welcome to the 2009 MA Research Consultation students who have joined the editorial team and have already been very busy doing manuscript reviews. Welcome also to new members of the editorial board. Joining us from this issue onwards are Christopher Sonn (Victoria University, Melbourne), Pinkie Mekgwe (CODESRIA, Dakar, Senegal), Elias Mpofu (The University of Sydney), Desmond Painter (University of Stellenbosch), Nomahlubi Makunga (University of Zululand), Alanna Collins (University of Fort Hare), Peace Kiguwa (University of the Witwatersrand), Jude Clark (University of KwaZulu-Natal), and Clarkand Clifford van Ommen (Rhodes University). We are confident that our expanded editorial board will assist greatly in spreading the word about New Voices and ensuring that the standard of the journal continues to improve.
EDITORIAL

COFFEE STORMS

A central element of the New Voices identity is that we are focussed on continuous innovation – both in terms of the material we publish and also in terms of the editorial process. As part of this quest we now have a ‘coffee storm’ once every three weeks. A key issue that we are currently wrestling with is how to steer the journal towards official accreditation without losing its open, quirky and supportive character. Ideas are welcome!

FORTHCOMING

Our plans for 2010 include a special issue on ‘Self and society in a networked world’. We also plan on publishing the proceedings of the first Southern African Students’ Psychology Conference. Watch this space!

Eduard Fourie (Editor)
May 2009